LOCAL ORGANISATION TO RECEIVE FUNDING BOOST

A locally based social sector organisation Youth Insearch Foundation (Aust) Inc will receive a $50,000 funding boost to help them modernise their operations and improve the services they deliver.

Member for Castle Hill Ray Williams MP said the NSW Government's Social Sector Transformation Fund was supporting small to medium sized organisations with grants.

"Social services organisations play a pivotal role delivering support to some of the most vulnerable people in our community," Mr Williams said.

"They've had to adapt how they deliver services during the pandemic and this funding will help them invest in improved business processes, technology upgrades and new ways of reaching out to their communities."

The Social Sector Transformation Fund supports organisations working in the social and health services sector, including homelessness, housing, disability, youth, health and child and family services.

Minister for Families, Communities and Disability Services Alister Henskens said the fund would create a stronger social services sector.

"Our community services organisations are the backbone of our nation and when they are strong, we are all strong," Mr Henskens said.

"This funding will enable grassroots community organisations to invest in practical changes that will help them remain viable long into the future."
